

sort of attitude which is a revolting part of any ego in most circumstances let alone "gunning down" another human being.

The last italicized paragraph in Mr. Olsen's account seems to come full circle. First he was struck with fear of drowning and his own mortality. On page 64 he made the comment, "I survived the war and here I am getting drowned as a tourist!" A different cord of fear struck again when the Vietnamese man showed up in front of him which was followed by immediate peace. They looked through each other's eyes into one another's souls. Beautiful It shows that the most viscous and inexplicable tragedy can be overcome even without words. Even if it was just in the heart of a sole pilot.

is this a positive?
using the same story used for the negative?

Close this window

i Moodle Docs for this page

Part 1 - You hinted around the credibility question, but never adequately addressed it. In the end, you just say "he was there, it must be true."

Part 2 needed more words to explain what you meant. I get the ego problem w/ Olsen, but it was not explained ~~well~~ well

Do we use hypo? in any more written work in this class.